

Happy Internet Safety Day! This year's theme is "an internet we trust", focussing on "fake news" and reliability of the internet. Watch the live lesson (shown at 11am this morning but available afterwards).

I have given you lots of activities to complete here so please feel free to pick and choose what you would like to do to fill your assignment time!

Watch these children discussing what they think makes something reliable online...

Have a go at this internet safety quiz online:

Discuss the 3 statements below one at a time...do you agree or disagree? Try to think about what someone would say with the opposite view to you. What would their thinking be?

The more times something has been shared online the more believable it is.

If you see something untrustworthy online, you should share it with your friends so they know it's not true.

"Seeing is believing" – if you can see photos or video evidence of something online, then it's more likely to be trustworthy.

Match up the definition with the word it is describing. I have made it less mind boggling by putting the red lines in...all of the matching happens within those lines (i.e. If you draw lines to match the definition and the word, the answers won't need you draw a line across the red line).

I have done the first one for you using a line. If you wanted to colour code them instead, that would also work!
